Pedagogical competence. In kindergarten, “Day of Duty” has arrived for the group. The teacher asks the children “Guys, who wants to be on duty today, raise your hand?” The guys began to boldly raise their hands and shout loudly. However, the teacher put only one of the children on duty, at her own discretion, without explaining her action, why she chose him and not someone else. As a result, all the other children began to quarrel among themselves, and two boys even got into a fight. What did the teacher do wrong in this situation? Why did the children start behaving this way? How can this problem be resolved?
