

10-case

A second grade student can recite material from a textbook almost by heart without much difficulty. However, if you ask a child a clarifying question, he gets lost and begins his story with what he has already said. What is the reason for this child's behavior? How can this feature of the cognitive process affect educational activities in the future (secondary grades)?