

10-case

From the employee's story:. When I started my work at the company, I immediately established a good business relationship with my boss. I considered him a wise and experienced leader, and he considered me an initiative and promising employee. Together we successfully solved many problems facing the unit: he gave instructions, I successfully carried them out. Over time, the following happened: I gained experience, I began to get tired of solving monotonous problems. I began to have my own view on some things and periodically entered into an argument with my boss. If he insisted on his own, I carried out the assignment without the same enthusiasm, purely formally. Our assessments of each other changed: he said that before I worked much better, but now I'm becoming a "don't care", I stopped considering him wise and began to believe that he had a lot of authoritarian habits. This situation has been going on for about a year now.