

6-case

Creative competence. A teacher and two parents took the second-graders out of town, into the forest. At first, the guys ran, screamed, and threw pine cones and branches. Then they sat down, resting their heads on their backpacks and bags, and fell silent. They no longer wanted to do anything, move, or speak. They refused to light a fire, cook food, or put up tents, citing fatigue. All this had to be done by the three adults accompanying them. When they returned, the children complained of boredom and wasted time. What had to be done to stir them up and interest them?
