Ethical competence. Children congratulate their teacher on Teacher's Day, give her flowers and a gift prepared in advance. The teacher responds to such congratulations with a dry “thank you” and leaves. The children did not understand this reaction and decided to find out what happened. It turned out that the teacher expected a completely different congratulation - she wanted everyone to come up to her, give her some little thing and congratulate her. She accused them of inattention and unloving. What was the teacher’s mistake and what should she have done?
